[. . .] taking care to avoid striking anyone deliberately on the head.["]

[. . .]

The issue over striking someone on the head with a baton was central to the case brought by the north Dublin man, Mr Derek Fairbrother in the early 1990s.

Mr Fairbrother was found to have been struck a number of times on the head with a baton after his car was stopped by gardaí in Finglas on June 12th, 1988.

It was established in court that he had received blows to the top of his head. In November 1992 he was awarded £375,000 compensation for his injuries by the High Court - the largest settlement from a claim made against the Garda.

The State, that is the taxpayer, was also liable for further legal costs of around £200,000.

[. . .]

It would appear from some of the television and other pictures taken during Sunday evening's disturbances in Dublin city centre that there breaches of the Garda regulations.

Several of the demonstrators claimed they were struck on the head by gardaí. There are several pictures of people with head wounds.

In one case a garda, again using a baton on protesters, does not appear to have his identification number on the epaulets of his regulation shirt. The gardaí are supposed to be identifiable by having their "badge" number visible while on duty. [. . .]

[. . .]

The pictures and eye witness accounts from Monday also indicate there was relatively little damage caused by the protestors.

[. . .]

He said several RTS supporters were arrested in September and all said there was very rough handling and liberal use of batons to break up what was an otherwise peaceful protest.

The Garda have relatively little experience or, apparently, understanding of the views and attitudes of many of the people participating in Monday's events." arsa nuachtán.<sup>10</sup>

In another case dating back to October 2014, a young lawyer, João Pedro Adrião, was severely beaten by officers from an 11-person PSP intervention unit prior to a football game in Guimarães, which resulted in him losing an eye. In November 2019, the presiding judge at the trial of the PSP officers concluded that although certain members of the unit were responsible for the “barbarous aggression”, it was not possible to identify the actual perpetrators of the aggression as they were all wearing helmets and visors, and hence he had to acquit them.

Moreover, the CPT is particularly concerned by the integrity and accuracy of certain documentation drawn up by the police, notably the PSP. In the course of the 2019 visit, the CPT's delegation received an allegation, corroborated independently by a number of witnesses whom the delegation met separately, concerning a university student who was arrested and taken to Lapa Police Station in Lisbon. At the station, he was handcuffed to the railing of the stairs and subsequently slapped and kicked by several PSP officers in an office after asking to contact someone and have the assistance of a lawyer. A little later, the student was released while his companions were transferred to Lisbon PSP Command Headquarters. When the delegation visited Lapa Police Station there was no record at all that the student had been arrested and detained for several hours at the station. The student in question, when met by the delegation, explained that he was too frightened to complain officially as he thought it might have consequences for his studies.” arsa Comhairle na hEorpa.<sup>16</sup>

On the positive side, technology has aided in the investigation and prosecution of cases of torture and related ill-treatment, including those of a sexual nature. The United Nations Manual on the Effective Investigation and Documentation of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (Istanbul Protocol, revised edition 2022) specifies that investigators should seek digital evidence and digital open-source information, wherever possible: “The investigator must seek to secure any probative information that is stored on, received or transmitted by an electronic device.” (para. 232)

The Istanbul Protocol further emphasizes: “If digital evidence is retrieved from seized electronic devices, such devices need to be preserved as physical evidence and the digital expert who extracted the data should prepare a report or affidavit that can be used in court.” (para. 232)

The Istanbul Protocol helpfully highlights that “digital evidence” includes the following:

“(a) electronic health records; (b) videos recorded by closed-circuit cameras; (c) pictures and videos, for instance of sites of violations and physical injuries, taken with mobile devices, such as digital cameras or smartphones; (d) pictures, videos or other information posted on social media; (e) information stored on computer hard drives and other peripheral equipment, such as memory cards, USB drives and CD-ROMs; (f) emails, texts and instant messages; [...] (h) location information stored on a cell phone or social media; and (i) metadata, that is information that provides information about a file (e.g. time and location when a digital photograph was taken).” (para. 232)

The Istanbul Protocol also mentions that establishing the authenticity of the digital evidence is a critical consideration for its use as evidence and indicates that it must be vetted by using recognized techniques of digital forensics (para. 232).” arsa dlíodóir ar son na Náisiún Aontaithe.<sup>17</sup>
